Why only me as a friend and brother as I have did that or did this or made that made this or keep that or kept this , being in that or been in it.As , it is in that in it.It is what means also where we have to keep in those .

That is this , this is what where is what ? What is where ? How it is ? When it is ? Where it why ? Why it where ? How it where ? Where it how ? Then this there ? There it when ? When what where ? Why is that ? That is what ? What is where ? Why is what ? When is why ? Why is when ? When where why and how where here ? Past where how ? How where it ? How it where ? How where why ? Why where how ? How is that ? That is this ? How it that ? How is that ? That is where ? Where what was ? Where it is ? All related to the word revolving right ?

Solutions are there in the : Book of Good news (Why ?)
Book of recitation (How ?)

So these are the solutions where we can see ,
For example , I have done that and this so why me ?

It said that ,
Coming back and think of that 7 beautitudes.
Blessed are the peacemakers.
Blessed is the one who percecutes for the sake of righteousness.

When some say ? How ?

God (Allah) is the best planner.
There we can see , And the disbelievers Planned, but God (allah) planned.And Allah is the best of planners.This refers to the plot against jesus where disbelievrs intended to kill him, but God(allah) raised him up and foiled their scheme.
Same again , When the disbelievers Plotted against you [O muhammad] (helper) to imprison , kill or expel you --- they plotted and God (Allah) planned.And Allah is the best of Planners.
This occurred when Quraysh leaders conspired to assassinate sir Muhammad (helper) , but Allah enabled his safe migration to medina.

So that leads to show where no human plot can overcome divine will.

The phrase "fear not, for I am with you" appears in the Quran, specifically in Surah Taha (20:46), where Allah speaks to Moses and Aaron as they prepare to confront Pharaoh:

> "He said, 'Fear not, indeed I am with you both; I hear and I see.'"

> — Quran 20:46

Friend – Brother

This verse reassures the prophets that Allah is with them, not physically, but through His knowledge, power, and support. It emphasizes divine presence in moments of difficulty.

Another verse reinforces this:

- > "And He is with you wherever you may be."
- > — Quran 57:4 (Surah Al-Hadid)

Scholars explain this "presence" as being through Allah's knowledge and awareness, not physical closeness, as Allah transcends space.

Quranic Principles on Religious Freedom

The Quran explicitly upholds the principle of no compulsion in religion, as stated in Surah Al-Baqarah 2:256:

"There is no compulsion in religion. Verily, the Right Path has become distinct from the wrong path."

This verse is widely regarded as a foundational statement on religious freedom in Islam. It emphasizes that faith must be chosen freely, not imposed by force. Classical and modern scholars, including Ibn Kathir and Al-Ghazali, interpret this to mean that Islam cannot be enforced through coercion, as true belief arises from conviction, not compulsion.

Surah Al-Baqarah, verse 256

Additionally, the Quran states in Surah Yunus 10:99:

"If it had been your Lord's will, all people on earth would have believed. Will you then compel them to believe?"

This reinforces the idea that belief is a matter of divine will and personal choice, not state enforcement.

Hadiths on Apostasy and Capital Punishment

While the Quran emphasizes freedom of belief, certain hadiths (sayings of the Prophet Muhammad ﷺ) are cited regarding the punishment for apostasy (riddah). One of the most frequently referenced hadiths is:

"Whoever changes his religion, kill him."

— Sahih al-Bukhari 6922, narrated by Ibn Abbas

This hadith is repeated in various forms across multiple collections and is often cited as the basis for the classical Islamic legal ruling that apostasy by a Muslim is punishable by death.

Another narration states:

"The blood of a Muslim... is not to be shed except in three cases: for murder, for adultery, and for abandoning the religion and fighting against the community."

— Sahih al-Bukhari and Muslim, narrated by Abdullah ibn Mas'ud

In a reported incident, when Ali ibn Abi Talib executed a group of apostates (described as zanadiqa or heretics), Ibn Abbas approved the action based on the Prophet's saying, though he objected to the method (burning), stating, "Do not punish with Allah's punishment."

Hadith on killing apostates

Interpretation and Contextual Understanding

The apparent tension between Quranic freedom of belief and hadiths prescribing death for apostasy has led to diverse interpretations:

- Classical Jurisprudence: All four Sunni schools (Hanafi, Maliki, Shafi'i, Hanbali) and Shia jurisprudence historically held that a Muslim who openly renounces Islam and refuses to repent after being given time (usually three days) may be executed. However, this was to be carried out only by the state, not individuals, and only after due process.

Friend – Brother

- Contextual Argument: Some scholars argue that the hadiths on apostasy were issued in a context of political rebellion, not private belief. The Arabic term riddah (apostasy) was often used during the Riddah Wars (632–633 CE) to describe tribes who not only left Islam but also took up arms against the Muslim state. Thus, the punishment may have been for treason or sedition, not mere disbelief.
- Modern Reinterpretations: Contemporary scholars like Nasr Hamid Abu Zayd and Mohammed Arkoun argue that the death penalty for apostasy is a historical construct, not a divine command. They emphasize the Quranic principle of free will and argue that belief cannot be policed.

Scholarly Perspectives on Apostasy

- Traditional View: The majority of classical scholars, including Ibn Taymiyyah and Al-Shafi'i, upheld the death penalty for apostasy, viewing it as a deterrent to social and religious chaos.
- Progressive View: Modern scholars like Khaled Abou El Fadl and Tariq Ramadan argue that the hadith must be read in context and that freedom of conscience is paramount. They stress that the Prophet never executed anyone solely for leaving Islam in private.
- Human Rights Consideration: Organizations like Yaqeen Institute and Wikilslam note that the issue remains highly debated, especially in light of international human rights standards that protect freedom of religion.

modern Islamic views on apostasy

Conclusion: Balancing Text and Context

The Quran clearly states there is no compulsion in religion, affirming personal choice in faith. However, certain hadiths prescribe capital punishment for apostasy, particularly when it involves public renunciation and rebellion.

The key lies in context:

- Was the apostasy a private matter of belief, or a public act of political defiance?

Friend – Brother

- Was it seen as a threat to the stability of the early Muslim community?

While classical Islamic law prescribed death for apostasy, modern interpretations increasingly emphasize mercy, freedom of conscience, and the distinction between belief and treason.

Ultimately, the issue remains one of the most contested and sensitive topics in Islamic theology and law.

Hadiths are taken by Muhhamd himself ?

Finished

Yes, hadiths are the recorded sayings, actions, and approvals of Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, transmitted by his companions and later scholars. They are not the words of Allah (which are in the Quran), but they reflect the Prophet's teachings and way of life (Sunnah).

Key Points:

- Source: Hadiths originate from Prophet Muhammad ﷺ — his words (e.g., “The reward of deeds depends on intentions”), actions (e.g., how he prayed), and silent approvals (e.g., allowing companions’ actions).
- Transmission: Companions memorized and wrote down his teachings. Later, scholars like Imam al-Bukhari and Muslim compiled them after verifying authenticity through rigorous chains of narrators (isnad).
- Purpose: To explain and implement the Quran, guide Islamic law, and show the Prophet's example.

Key Quranic Basis:

- "Obey Allah and obey the Messenger" (Quran 4:59)
- "Whatever the Messenger gives you, take it; and whatever he forbids you, abstain from it" (Quran 59:7)
- "Whoever obeys the Messenger has obeyed Allah" (Quran 4:80)

These verses make obedience to the Prophet ﷺ a religious obligation, which is fulfilled by following authentic hadiths.

Role of Hadith:

- Explains how to perform prayers, fasting, Hajj, and other acts of worship not detailed in the Quran.
- Provides moral and legal guidance in personal, social, and judicial matters.
- Forms the foundation of Islamic law (Sharia) alongside the Quran.

Scholars agree that rejecting all hadiths is contrary to mainstream Islamic belief, as it would make practicing Islam as revealed impossible.

muslims believe in jesus christ? and his teachings note : Not same as Trinity Style , i mean.

Finished

Yes, Muslims believe in Jesus Christ (Isa, peace be upon him) as one of the greatest prophets of God, but not as divine or part of a Trinity.

Key Beliefs:

- Prophet, not divine: Muslims believe Jesus was a human prophet, born miraculously to the Virgin Mary (Maryam), and performed miracles by God's will—such as healing the sick and raising the dead—but he is not God or the Son of God.

Friend – Brother

- Rejection of Trinity: The Quran explicitly rejects the concept of the Trinity (Surah An-Nisa 4:171), stating:
"Do not say 'Trinity'... Allah is only One God."
- Teachings of Jesus: Muslims believe Jesus taught pure monotheism (Tawhid), calling people to worship One God, just like all previous prophets. His core message aligns with Islamic teachings: submission to the will of God.
- Gospel (Injil): Muslims believe God revealed the Injil (Gospel) to Jesus, but hold that the original message was later altered or lost, and that the current New Testament writings are not the exact words of Jesus.

Gospel (Injil): Muslims believe God revealed the Injil (Gospel) to Jesus, but hold that the original message was later altered or lost, and that the current New Testament writings are not the exact words of Jesus. so even john also not same ? likely adultrated ; so when it is adultrated so why they are even aligning it to quran and calling to revert back by showing proof of jesus christ?; they has to not take as an example.

Finished

Yes, Muslims believe the original Injil (Gospel) revealed to Jesus was from God, but hold that the current New Testament writings — including the Gospel of John — are not the exact, unchanged words of Jesus, and have been altered over time.

Why Muslims Still Reference the New Testament:

1. Belief in Partial Preservation:

Muslims believe that some authentic teachings of Jesus remain in the Gospels, even if mixed with later interpretations. The Quran says the Injil contained "guidance and light" (Quran 5:46), and commands Christians to "judge by what Allah revealed in it" (Quran 5:47), implying it still holds value.

2. Quran as the Final Arbiter:

The Quran is seen as the guardian (Muhaymin) of previous scriptures (Quran 5:48). It doesn't reject all earlier texts but filters and confirms what aligns with pure monotheism (Tawhid) and corrects what contradicts it.

3. Distinction Between Text and Message:

While the written Gospels may be altered, Muslims respect Jesus's core message — worship of One God — which the Quran affirms. When calling Christians to revert, they point to what the Quran confirms, not to corrupted interpretations.

so there is so many debates and also many more going on isn't? yes or no ?
what you say can you tell me ?

Finished

Yes, there are many debates — and they continue today — about the authenticity, preservation, and interpretation of the Gospels, especially between Muslims and Christians.

Muslims believe:

Friend – Brother

- The original Injil (Gospel) was a divine revelation from God to Jesus.
- The current New Testament Gospels (including John) are not the exact words of Jesus but human writings composed later, containing both truth and alteration.
- While some of Jesus's true teachings may remain, the overall message has been distorted over time, especially regarding his divinity.

Christians believe:

- The Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke, John) are authentic records of Jesus's life and teachings, written by eyewitnesses or their close associates.
- The Bible has been accurately preserved through centuries.

Because of these differing views, Muslims do not reject all Gospel content — only what contradicts Islamic monotheism (Tawhid). They may refer to parts that align with the Quran (e.g., Jesus speaking of one God) as confirmation, not as proof of Christian doctrine.

So yes — the debates are real, ongoing, and rooted in different understandings of revelation and history.

Finished

The term "sams" does not exist in Islamic theology or the Quran as a recognized concept or label for people who accept parts of scripture.

You may be referring to "People of the Book" (Ahl al-Kitab) — a well-known Islamic term for Jews, Christians, and others who received divine revelation before Islam. Muslims believe they should respect them and acknowledge the truth in their original scriptures, while also believing those texts have been altered over time.

There is no Islamic term "sams" for someone who selectively accepts parts of religious texts. The idea you're describing — accepting parts of the Bible or Quran — is discussed in Islamic scholarship, but not under that name.
